

Report of Operative G T Purdy

Sept. 16th, 1926

Re: Mrs. Jane Gibson

Operative went to Hoboken, N.J. this A.M. to interview Capt. Garrick of the Hoboken Police Department regarding the search of records he was making. He advised that Detective Sullivan, who is in charge of the records, spent two days looking for the arrest of Rose Gleitzman and May Ray, but was unable to find any record of these persons. Capt. Garrick explained that in those days the records were not kept in the shape they do to-day and it is a difficult task to locate any record of those days.

Operative then proceeded to the Public Library at 5th Street and Park Ave. and found that the newspaper files of the Hoboken News are kept in good shape. Looked through the files of 1897 in an effort to locate the arrest mentioned or the supposed slander suit mentioned by Kesserling, but could not find anything regarding either the arrest or suit in the file.

Operative looked over the City Directories of Hoboken which date back to 1836 and find that the Eisleitner family were mentioned in it in 1885 and at that time they lived at 77 Newark Ave. Charles Eisleitner's occupation is listed as "laborer." In 1886 they lived at 32 Grand St. The first directory which lists Charles Eisleitner is in 1878 and at that time he was living at 61 Grand Street. In 1891 and 1892 Charles Eisleitner lived at 24 Adams Street, laborer. 1893 - Charles Eisleitner, 125 Jefferson St., driver.

1894 Charles Eisleitner, 361 Newark Ave., laborer.
1894 George Eisleitner, 361 Newark Ave., laborer.

The last directory this family was entered is 1894. Operative made inquiries at some of the addresses and find that the numbers have been changed and some of the buildings have been torn down and have factories in their places. Did not find anyone who knew the family.
